Profile

At the core of my teaching philosophy lies a belief that language and literature are transformative tools. They open avenues to empathy, critical thinking, and cultural understanding. I aim to create a classroom environment where curiosity thrives and students feel encouraged to explore texts beyond their surface meanings. I emphasize discussion-based learning, integrating perspectives from history, politics, and identity studies to deepen literary understanding. I believe every student brings a unique voice, and my role is to guide them in articulating that voice with clarity and confidence. My approach is rooted in: Empathy-driven teaching – respecting each student's background and learning pace Conceptual clarity – ensuring literary theories and texts are accessible and engaging Cultural contextualization – encouraging students to relate literature to real-world contexts Technological integration – using digital tools and multimedia to enrich learning experiences My goal is to not only teach literature but to inspire a lifelong appreciation for language, thought, and expression. I view education as a collaborative journey, one where teacher and student grow together.
